LIQUOR DEALERS

RIGHT FOR ONCE

On the grounds that liquor is "Dammable Stuff," is as some of the other reformers call it "Liquid Hell Fire," and that it is responsible for nearly all crime, and that it steals away our brains, state after state has adopted prohibition and forty odd states have ratified an amendment in favor of prohibition. And hundreds of millions of private properties will be destroyed without compensation and hundreds of millions of revenues will be sacrificed and all for the purpose of preventing men and women from using whiskey, wine and beer.

In various states automobiles, suit cases, berths on Pullman cars, and occasionally residences are being searched for liquor that it may be confiscated and the holders fined and imprisoned.

Our great Commonwealths and our national Government are crusading along the lines of Carrie Nation, and they are doing it on so big a scale that Carrie Nation has been forgotten. So intent are our great lawmakers, on prohibiting the use of liquor by all people save the lawmakers that Bills of Rights and Declarations of Independence have been literally thrown into discard.

Down in Tennessee which is made a veritable desert of thirst, Uncle Sam's sleuths have been very active of late, and thousands of quarts, pints, and half-pints have been seized and the owners probably have been fined and sent to Federal prison at Atlanta, Ga.

And what did Uncle Sam do with this vast amount of liquor—this "Dammable Stuff" that no man should be permitted to use? Was it destroyed as it should have been? On the contrary, it was shipped up to Louisville and advertised and sold at public auction at the Custom House. Men and women were invited to come and buy this liquor, and its virtues were extolled by the good, natured auctioneer to such an extent that it realized extraordinary prices.

The only excuse for the confiscation of all this liquor, including the automobiles in which it was carried is the contention that it should not be used by human beings, and yet the United States Government, after taking the property from men who owned it, sells it to the people of Louisville and puts the money received into the public treasury.

The contention of the prohibitionists is that liquor belongs in the category of drugs such as cocaine, morphine, and the like, and what would be thought of Uncle Sam if he should confiscate a shipment of such drugs and then bring them to Louisville and sell them at public auction to all who cared to purchase?

I present this particular instance to the press as one of the thousand inconsistencies that makes national and state-wide prohibition look more like farce than a serious effort to bring about a reform.
